Dear Mr Kreutzer

Firstly my apologies for writing in English.

I am a long-distance friend of the Rosa Rose Garden in Berlin and part of a growing network of like-minded people who take a strong interest in improving their local environment through direct action. I am just writing to express my disappointment at the news that your company cannot find a way to let this site continue to exist in its current incarnation as a community garden.

It is a pity that Kreutzer-Gruppe have not been able to use this opportunity to co-exist and build a good relationship with the community by perhaps offering the gardeners a long lease of the site, or even writing off the cost of donating the site to them as a PR expense or charitable donation (I know in the UK this could have great tax advantages apart from the obvious good press) I am sure your company spends a great deal of money trying to get good publicity and this might be a perfect opportunity to get 'green credentials' as well as actually do some genuine good.

I sincerely hope you can find a greener more ecological and humanistic solution to the issue.

Best regards

Esther Jury
